REICH WORKING ON PLAN TO ESTABLISH CURRENCY OF GOLD

Paper Marks to Be Retired for Substitute as Medium of BERLIN, Aug. 18-German financial experts have begun work on what is declared to be a comprehensive scheme for the retirement of paper marks and substituting a gold currency as the medium of exchange. In the meanwhile, according to authoritative information, the new Chancellor has put out his "lines" with a view of finding a middle ground to nego-tiate a Ruhr Valley settlement with France and Belgium. These are the outstanding features of the situation

It is realized in all quarters that the Berlin Government must act quickly in connection both as regards interior and foreign affairs. The German domestic and exterior problems are now so closely related that there is no separating them. Dr. Gustav Stresemann is obviously convinced of this, and he is proceeding accordingly with his characteristic energy. Much depends on the food supply. This is improving slowly, but the specter of another crisis such as that of last week-or one even more acute-still hovers near, and it is realized that should the mark suffer another debacle, conditions which would arise immediately would be much graver than anything that has gone before.

New Currency Needed At the same time, should prices continue to rise, or even to remain at their present level without a corresponding increase in wages, an equally grave situation is bound to ensue. Farmers and peasants continue to exchange many of their products for paper marks, which they hold to be worthless, and responsible officials are convinced that it is urgently nec-essary to find immediately some mone-FRANCE PREVENTS tary unit which the growers and dis-tributers of food will accept in ex-

statement that it has been decided to issue such a new currency, but the details of the scheme have not been worked out definitely.

It has been determined, however, that the new currency must have a gold basis with a secure deposited in the Reichsbank. The chief problem therefore is where sufficient gold is to be obtained to do this. One of the chief proponents of the scheme told the Monitor representative here that the Monitor representative here that the Reichsbank already has 500,000,-000 gold marks which it has practi-cally been decided to use for this purpose. It is proposed to augment this reserve by compelling the holders of foreign gold and bills in Germany to turn their holdings over to the Gov-ernment in exchange for the new cur-

It will be seen that the scheme is still in an embryonic state, but the fact that it has at last been decided upon, gives some cause for optimism. Nothing less than necessity is impelling forward men who are responsible for finding a solution to the tremendously grave problems confronting this nation, and there is every indication that they are bending to their task with the full knowledge of what failure will mean.

One of the most responsible parliamentarians here emphasized this fact to the Monitor representative last night and when pressed to say what he en-(Continued on Page 3. Column 1)

GERMAN EDUCATIONAL REFORM INCLUDES WORLD UNITY POLICY LEAGUE AND COURT

Peace Teaching Substituted for War History-New Textbook Admits Germany Was Main Cause of Conflict

Dr. Roman, a graduate and M. A. of Yale, and a Ph. D. of Berlin University, has not only studied at the Sorbonne for the last four years, winning for himself the first state degree of Docteur es Lettres granted to an American, with the highest rank of tres honorable, but also has made a first-hand study of the relationship between the economic, industrial and educational systems of Europe. Explaining the educational reform in Germany, Dr. Roman said: During the war it looked as though great educational reforms were to come in Great Britain and France. During the times of stress, when it looked as if the Allies might lose, these countries made big promises. But with the end of the war there came a reaction in the victorious countries, and it was defeated Germany which went ahead.

Two Advancements Cited

Two Advancements Cited

The two most important reforms which have taken place in the educational system in Germany are those in administration and in curriculum. The great change in administration has come through the abolition of the formerly autocratic power of the Government-appointed "herr direcktor." In Saxony and in certain Socialistic states there are no directors now, and in other states the gymnasien, realschulen and volkesscheulin are under the directorship of a teacher, elected by his fellow teachers for a period of three years. His official prerogative is to open the mail.

GEN. BLISS FAVORS TO PROMOTE PEACE

Says Ruhr Impasse Is Business Problem Badly Bungled by Politicians and Military

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., Aug. 18 (Staff Correspondence) - Civilization standing at the crossroads; behind, the darkness through which for eight years past humanity has strug-gled; ahead, two ways, the one the path of national isolation, leading back again into the valley, the other, the broader road of co-operative associa-tion—a road of hope, of understand-ing and of peace. Civilization stands at these crossroads and pauses, while, America makes its choice. This is the picture of the world situation, drawn Saturday morning, before the Institute of Politics, by Gen. Tasker H. Bliss of the United States Mary.

"We wish to sit with you," he said,
"at the table of international understanding and good will. In good conscience we are eager to meet you frankly and invite and offer co-operation. I can only speak officially for our United States. One hundred millions

none of war."

Will any man, any American or foreigner that may be within our borders, eigner that may be within our borders, stand in the memory of our President and say that is not a good policy? It is a good policy for us and for them. We can do nothing better than carry it into effect as far as possible.

Armaments Hinder Progress

Excessive armaments, militaristic rivalries, demands for security based Excessive armaments, militaristic rivalries, demands for security based on force, these but serve to hinder progress and place a premium on the qualities of character which were outstanding in the primeval man or the modern savage. Fear is clutching at the throats of nations, and fear, at the present moment, has brought the world to an impasse so that when a smaller nation has the good luck to get the larger one down, it must destroy it as an organized nation or keep it down by military force for all time.

I can seen no other conclusions. The lesson is as plainly before us as if written in a schoolboy's textbook. It is that state relations will never be bettered in their ultimate results until nations have some reasonable assurance of safety from each other than on which primeval man did and the modern savage does rely.

According to billboard men. who will also be fully represented at the hearing, the regulations on advertising signs and devices which the Division of Highways have under consideration, are "drastic." Members of the Mas-sachusetts Federation of Planning Boards, on the other hand, are dissatisfied with the leniency of the new rules and declare that the proposed limitation on the size of billboards allows a comfortable margin on the largest size billboard now in common

The Massachusetts Civic League, as represented by Judge Robert Walcott, chairman of the league committee on billboard regulation, takes a middle ground, and terms the proposed regulations "a hopeful beginning.

Strict Enforcement Urged

The policy of permits for billboards hitherto pursued by the Division of Highways has been little more than a licensing system, Judge Walcott said today to a representative of The Christian Science Monitor. Permits to erect billboards have hitherto been granted to nearly all applicants, he explained, and the proposal to limit the size of such structures to 12 feet in height and 25 feet in length he regards as a distinct advance. More strict enforcement of new and old regulations, however, will, in his opinion, be necessary if the Division of Highways is to control the billboard nuisance effectively.

"Almost the only step in the control of outdoor advertising which the division has taken, prior to its present proposals," said Judge Walcott, was the creation of scenic highways. "was the creation of scenic highways.
But even here, law enforcement has been lax. One year ago today I notified the division that there were 17 billboards standing on the North Shawroad. They are still there today I know, also, of a number whice a still disfiguring the Mohawk Tra [."

Criticism of the policy of the Division of Highways, with regard to billboard restriction, is contained in the August bulletin of the Massachusetts.

war is becoming more dangerous than profitable to civilization. Two ways of escape present themselves. Neither, however, in the opinion of General Bliss is complete without the other.

Urges Strengthening League In the first place, he suggests a strengthening of the League of Nations and the Permanent Court of In-ternational Justice which, in the end, would bring about an increase of senti-ment throughout the world more faconciliation than to conflict. In the second place, he pointed out that international wars, after the husk of pretext has been stripped off, therefore, should have more to say in the management of world affairs Speaking of the League of Nations, he

Organizing Public Sentiment

And if it really be its policy—to use ords I quoted before—"To sit at the able of international understanding and goodwill, to invite and offer co and goodwill, to invite and offer co-operation," none could better take the lead in bringing this about. A well considered study of this subject spread broadcast, ampiltying all these details and more, would vastly help in creat-ing that organized public sentiment in this country and in Europe that is so necessary before anything can be done.

As to the application of business practices to the present world situa-tion, General Bliss referred to the Ruhr, declaring:

Assume that that situation grew out of the failure to deliver certain amounts of material, mainly coal and coke. That material was produced by business men in one country and was wanted by busi-ness men in another. It is true that it ness men in another. It is true that it was being delivered under a treaty as a penalty. But the people who produced the coal or coke were paid by their Government, just as under normal conditions they would have been paid by the foreign receiver of it. It is the gravest importance, neverther that nations have accepted such figures in his address, but these were subordinated to the spiritual emphasis behind them. And this spiritual emphasis swept his hearers into an understanding which, when he had ended, expressed itself in an ovation as he left the auditorium through long aisle opened for him by the audience. Halfway to the door, he by Count Harry Kessler, German lecturer at the Institute, who greeted him in French and together the two walked from the building.

After an exhaustive outline of the financial straits of France, his final appeal was for a resort to other forces than material. He said:

After all this is a most pessimistic picture I have drawn. But it is not pessimistic. The spirit of friendliness, of brotherliness, of Christ-likeness has not perished. In its survival is a hope more powerful than the most depressing of situations. To make it supreme will not be easy. Sacrifices will have to be made. Yes, you here in wealthy America, you too must make sacrifices, France must sacrifice. But, giving together, sacrificing together, serving together, we may lift ourselves to a higher level, where old hatreds may die out, and a new friendliness be born.

The Black Sea is, and rightfully should always be, a Russia-dominated body of water. Russia cannot sit idly by while the Turks run up the Star and Crescent over the Dardanelles and the hinterland that controls it. Russian action must be delayed, however, until a day when a modern democratic nation will be able to ask, in the name of Democracy, for its rights. When that time comes, although Great Britain and Russia have been traditional diplomatic opponents at Constantinople, I believe opponents at Constantinople, I believe

In defining the present legal situation with regard to billboard regulation the bulletin notes that since 1920. when the control and restriction of these advertising devices was placed by law in the hands of the Division of Highways, no rules for the restriction of billboards in size, style of construction, or location in regard to residences have been made, and that during the same time ordinances proposed for restriction of billboards by nearly 20 municipalities have been disap proved. Under state law towns and cities may draw up their own rules, subject to the approval of the state authorities; but only two ordinances approved by the Division.

A form of municipal billboard ordinance recommended by the Federation of Planning Boards in this bulletin, advises limiting outdoor advertising to a size of 4 feet in outside vertical width, and 8 feet in length.

Near East Relief Officer Tells of Efforts to Rehabilitate Natives in Ancestral Home

Special from Monitor Bureau NEW YORK, Aug. 18—"The Assyrian Nation is now at the parting of the ways. It is facing a great crisis in Persia," said L. W. Archer, acting director of the foreign department of the Near East Relief when interviewed here by a representative of The Christian Science Monitor regarding the efforts to rehabilitate the Assyrians in their ancestral home in the Urumia basin, surrounding Lake Urumia in the northwest of Persia.

Mr. Archer in explaining the Assyrian situation said: The Assyrians who though under the jurisdiction of Persia, still consider themselves as a nation, have been reduced by privations and massacres from 200,000 to 40,000. They are scattered, barely subsisting as small farmers on arid soil or as day laborers building roads and rallways, between Tabriz, in the north, and Hamadon in central Persia. The Near East Relief is at present sia. The Near East Relief is at present caring for more than 2000 Assyrian orphans, made destitute during the war and during the privations of the flight from the Urumia basin that followed. The Persian Government refuses to allow the Assyrians to fulfill their desire to return to Urumia, saying that it cannot afford them sufficient protection against invasion from across the Turk-

Turkish Border Attacks

For many years before the war the Assyrians had lived peacefully in the Urumia basin, perhaps the most fertile and productive region in all Persia, and had become quite prosperous. When the war broke, bands of wild Kurds swept across the Turkish border, wiping out 142 Assyrian villages and massacring large numbers of the inhabitants. They drove the rest out of the basin and settled down there for a time. The Assyrians, what was left of them, filed southward along the western border of Persia, then turned north again till they came to Hamadon.

By the time they reached the city,

By the time they reached the city, and began to filter through into the territory between there and Tabriz, their numbers had been cut to 40,000 by the hardships endured on the flight from Lake Urumia. Some of them were absorbed by the British Army, which employed them building railway lines in Mesopotamia. After the war ended, the Kurds left the Urumia basin and returned to Turkey. But the Persian Government was, and is, afraid to allow the Assyrians to go back to their allow the Assyrians to go back to their native heath, because of the possibility that the Turks would sweep down on them again. LIME RESOURCES MAY BE DEVELOPED

New Hampshire to Investigate Deposits - Parade Held at Farm Bureau Gathering

DURHAM, N. H., Aug. 18 (Special)

Possibility of developing the lime

TAX RESERVE PLAN resources in this State is likely to receive considerable attention following the announcement yesterday at the meeting of the Farm Bureau Federation at the New Hampshire University that an investigation in cooperation with the university experi-ment station is under way. Lime has been a fundamental need of New Hampshire soils, tests of several hundred farms showing an average need of two tons an acre to correct the acidity which prevents successful growing of clover and other legumes.

service and farm bureaux the amount lime has increased greatly in the last few years and now amounts to about 2000 tons a year. This is said to be only a fraction, however, of the amount needed, and the continued high price of lime has seriously held back the use of it. Through the development of New Hampshire's own lime resources it is hoped that this problem may be solved. Some of the deposits are said to show as high as 92 per cent in quality.

Through long lanes, of automobiles and cheering crowds, past a reviewing stand where Fred H. Brown, Governor, John H. Bartlett, former Governor, State Grange Master Sawyer, President Putnam of the Farm Bureau Federation, R. D. Hetzel, president of the university and other notables watched with great interest, wound, this afternoon, the farm and home parade which celebrated on Farm Bureau Day the tenth anniversary of the starting of county extension work in New Hampshire. More than 50 floats were in line representing various state-wide agricultural organizations,

"I believe I could make a hand organ myself," said Johnny to his sister Mary. "Let's go out in the barn and see what we've got."

There was a place in the barn where Johnny kept things that grown-ups had thrown away, and, wanted to make anything, he always went and looked over his collection. First he found an old scrubbing board that used to be in the laundry until it had lost one leg, and then he found an old piece of leather strap, and then he found an old coffee mill that had got broken so that it wouldn't hold anything. He put them all together in one place. "I don't see how you're going to make a hand organ out of them," said

"Maybe you don't," said Johnny, "but, if you want to help, you'll go get me some nails and a hammer from my tool chest."

Mary got the nails and the hammer. "You see, Mary," said Johnny, "this old mill has got a perfectly good crank, and this old scrubbing board has got a perfectly good leg. Now you watch me."

So Mary watched, and Johnny nailed the mill to the scrubbing board, so that the crank stood out at one side. And then he nailed the ends of the leather strap to opposite sides of the scrubbing board, and left a long loop that he put over his shoulder. he had put it over his shoulder, it held the scrubbing board just the way a leather strap had held the hand organ, and when he turned the handle of the old mill, it went round just like the crank of the hand organ. And as he turned it round and round, he made noise with his mouth that was meant

ANGLO-TOKYO PACT IS NOW CONCLUDED

Accord of 12 Years' Standing Automatically Superseded by Four-Power Pacific Treaty

By FREDERIC WILLIAM WILE WASHINGTON, Aug. 18-Aug. 17, 1923, will rank high in the diplomatic annals of the United States, for it marks the formal and final destruction of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance. That pact, after an existence of 12 years, was terminated automatically at noon yesterday, with the exchange and de-posit at the State Department of the ratifications of the Washington Conference treaties.

Article IV of the Four-Power Pacific Treaty expressly provided that, upon the deposit of ratifications, "the agreement between Great Britain and Japan, which was concluded at London on July 13, 1911, shall terminate." Thus the United States accomplishes what was, in many respects, its chief objective in summoning the Washington Conference on Limitation of Arma-ments and the problems of the Pacific. It is of itself an achievement that ought to remain indissolubly joined with the constructive policies of War-ren G. Harding's interrupted Adminis-

It is now permissible to say that the Government of the United States, during the years preceding the calling of the conference, looked upon the maintenance of the Anglo-Japanese Alli-ance as a menace to peace in the Far East. China's weakness, it was felt, offered an invitation to ambitious powers, notably Japan, to undermine Chinese political and economic independence. Many American statesmen were apprehensive that, under cover of an alliance with the British, the Japanese military party might be spurred into excesses and activities in China, carrying with them the seeds of serious complications.

Preservation of "Open Door" The United States' interest in China then, as now, was the preservation of the "open door." If Japan or any other power had comported itself in China so as to restrain American commercial opportunities there, the United States anticipated conditions which might have involved it in war in the Pacific and the Far East.

Thus it became the purpose of President Harding and Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State, to bring about the annulment of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance at the Washington Conference. To a certain extent, it had outlived usefulness for both contracting ties. Japan already had eliminated Russia as a menace to either Japanese or British interests in the

Three years after the original alli-ance was concluded, Great Britain and Japan in consequence of the World War, destroyed Germany as a Far Eastern power. In the meantime the alliance had lost much of its original popularity among the people of the British Empire. The oversea domin-ions in particular—and especially Aus-tralia and New Zealand, which are more or less antagonistic to the Japanese-were anxious for the partnership to come to an end. It was, therefore, comparatively easy for the United States to obtain British support for the project of terminating the alliance.

Appeasing Japan

How to appease Japan was a more difficult proposition. The British came to Washington in 1921 agreeable in theory to the idea of ending the agree-Japan, could not be cast off ignominiously without some kind of quid pro quo. The British at one time sugested that the substitute pact might take the form of an extended Anglo-Japanese alliance and its conversion into a triple alliance, including the United States. That project not proying feasible, for many reasons, the eventual result was the Four-Power Pact, which included France.

Japanese diplomacy finally con-sented to the abolition of the alliance with Great Britain in consideration not only of the Four-Power Treaty, but particularly because Japan re-garded that the naval limitation treaty gave it such guarantees of military and naval security that the British alliance was no longer indispensable. It is a strange commentary on the Washington Conference that at the very moment its peace-guaranteeing treaties come into effect, four Far Eastern powers are arranging to strengthen their naval defenses in the Pacific. Only this week the United States Navy General Board recommended the expenditure of $111,000,000 on bases and fortifications in the Pacific, mainly at Hawaii. Great Britain is about to spend $55,000,000 on the new naval base at Singapore.

Dutch Defenses

Even The Netherlands, because of its vast colonial empire in the Far East, is for the first time in its history going heavily into debt for the purose of establishing strong naval defenses around Java, Sumatra and other units of the Dutch East Indies. Both the United States and Great Britain are wholly within the rights of the Five-Power Naval Treaty in developing their fortification schemes in the East and in the Pacific. The Netherlands was not a party to the treaty.

Japan, too, is making full use of the liberties the freaty gives with respect to strengthening defenses. Japan is understood to be concentrating on is understood to be concentrating on the expansion of its light cruiser, destroyer and submarine forces. Also, it has been stated, the Japanese quietly are developing a formidable air force throughout the islands.

Thus, while the Pacific powers are turning the diplomatic machinery of peace, they are at the same time carefully preparing for the possibilities, of another war, however remote they

Meet for U. S. Singles Tennis

Title for Second Successive

Year

FOREST HILLS, N. Y., Aug. 18

(Special)—History is today repeating liteling in the singles division of the United States Lawn Tennis Association championship tournament for women which is being played on the courter of the Miss. Clayton forced deuce once.

The was little to choose between them in the earlier part of the struggle, with both depending on their deep driving to draw the other out of same on service, only to lose the next three, chiefly on her errors. Then she had her turn, and overtook and passed the champion by winning the next three. But by this time Mrs. Mallory was at her best, and game after game went to her until she had won the set, though Mrs. Clayton forced deuce ship title this year that has been sta for some time, is the opinion of the courter of the Miss. though Mrs. Clayton forced deuce once.

The second set was also even, at the start. First each broke through the other's service, then each won with it. But again Mrs. Clayton was forced into a running game when the champion's speedy drives kept her running from one side of the court to the other, and the rest of the match was once more a procession, with Mrs. Clayton trailing, though trying hard in every game, bringing several to deuce points.

The speed of the matches may be imagined, when it is realized that each match required only a few minimagined, when it is realized that each match required only a few minutes over a half hour, Miss Wills requiring 35 minutes, while Mrs. Mallory took 33. The match by points:

DOUBLES DRAW

Great Battle Expected Next Week When 31 Pairs Start

CHESTNUT HILL, Mass,, Aug. 18 (Special)—That there is going to be one of the greatest battles for the United States lawn tennis doubles championship title this year that has been staged for some time, is the opinion of those who have been studying the draw for the tournament which will open next Monday on the courts of the Long-wood Cricket Club here. Drawings wood Cricket Club here. Drawings were announced Friday afternoon and show that there are 31 pairs in quest of the honors held during the past two years by W. T. Tilden 2d, Philadelphia, and Vincent Richards, Yonkers, N. Y. Of the 31 pairs drawn, six have been seeded.

Several new combinations are to be seer in action for the first time and some of them are international in character. The pairing of Tilden and B. I. C. I., Aug. 18—Never before in the 41 years' history of the New York Yacht Club's Astor Cup classic has a race been won by so close a margin as that in which the new Marconi rigged Wildfire, owned and sailed by C. L. Harding of Boston, and sailed by C. L. Harding of Boston, won yesterday as a margin of only 43 seconds separated Wildfire from her closest competitor, the big schooner Enchantress, owned by W. E. Iselin. Wildfire took a big lead at the start, but Enchantress gained continually. Wildfire, however, picked up a fine breeze near the end of the race and captured the cup.

It was the first victory in an Astor Cup or Goelet Cup race for schooners.

Cup or Goelet Cup race for schooners of a Boston craft since the Volunteer won in 1891.

The New York 50-foot Harpoon, owned by F. D. M. Strachan of New York, captured the cup for sloops. The summary:

Where Courtesy Reigns

NO other shoe store in the world, we believe, offers quite the same service as The Coward Store. Here courtesy reigns.

Coward customers are Coward friends whom we treat as we would be treated ourselves. When a shoe is tried on there is no urging to buy unless we feel it will continue to please. We have no hesitancy in advising against a particular pair if in our honest opinion it is unsuitable.

Probably nowhere else are more shoes sold from a single store. Thorough service, our ability to satisfy and sound values for nearly half a century have built this remarkable shoe business.

Australia Will Be Challenger Again

Clinches Victory Over France by Winning Doubles Match AUSTRALIAN-FRENCH DAVIS CUP

CHESTNUT HILL, Mass., Aug. 18 (Special)—With the right to meet the United States in the challenge round of the Davis Cup tennis championship series of 1923, already won by the Australians over the French, the winning of today's singles matches on the courts of the Longwood Cricket Club here could not have any bearing on the result of the finals between these two keep the one-point lead which he is now holding in the championship standing.

Two of the seven games which were played in the tenth round yesterday had to be adjourned at the end of the regular scheduled time of eight hours, but they were completed in the evening. In one of these Vladimir Sourin of Washington played the white men in a queen's pawn opening against R. T. Black of Syracuse. After 60 moves it was adjourned, but when resumed in the evening, Black won the decision at the end of 91 moves. Edward Lasker, Chicago, and A. E. Santasiere, New York, were the other players who adjourned. Lasker played a four knights opening with the white men, 50 moves in the evening, the two players agreed to a draw.

Chief interest was centered in the game between David Janowski of Paris and Schapiro. Janowski had the white men and Schapiro met his opening with a queen's gambit decline. The French champion worked hard for a victory; but Schapiro held him tight during the greater part of the day's play. When the players agreed to a draw after 61 mioves had been taken, Janowski had tak shight against a bishop with an equal number of pawns.

Ariel has 14 points by virtue of her two victories, while Gossoon, her near-est competitor, has 10 because of placing third twice, Sari, also with 10 points because of a second and a fourth plac-ing, was disqualified yesterday when she fouled Rogue, former Boston Class champion. Katia, another with 10 points, has a protest standing against her which may disqualify her, the result of a brush with Yank yesterday.

By virtue of her two victories and splendid performance in the previous trials, Ariel stands well up in the selection of Lake Michigan's entry in the Richardson Cup races at Toronto in September. The final trial will be run Sunday after which the lake's entry in the race with the Canadians of On-tario and the Americans of Erie-Huron will be announced. The former New York champion won the second race yesterday after a nip and tuck affair over the last mile of the 12-mile race. Katia, who finished second, repeatedly took the lead away from her adversary but could not

SWISS FOR CANADA

MONTREAL, Que., Aug. 2 (Special correspondence)—Great numbers of Swiss would come to Canada if allowed to settle in communities, said Prof. Charles Biegel, speaking in Montreal on behalf of the Swiss National Society. "Canada should grant to groups of Swiss permission to establish themselves in this country in a way to form Swiss villages," said he. "Canada would have everything to gain by adopting such a policy, as the Swiss can be easily acclimatized to this country.

AN OHIO economist rises to remark that farm income as commonly the calculated and announced does his pedestal," writes a subscriber from states, the Ruralist knows of none. victories in two starts and one of her nearest competitors disqualified by a foul yesterday, Ariel, former R-Class champion in New York waters, goes into the final Sir Thomas Lipton Cup race today with her claim to the title practically clinched.

Ariel has 14 points by virtue of her account the fact that much of the farm product is not sold but is consumed by the farm family, and that no credit is allowed for the rental value of the house. To the city dweller, much of whose income is absorbed by rent, provisions and fuel, the farmer's income seems very nearly longer term used by most states for comparable to his own savings plus.

Lacalculated and announced does not take into account the fact that much of the farm product is not peculiar to New York! Ask Massachusetts, Vermont, or any other state having a farm bureau! I was doing extension work in New York State when Cornell workers voted to some the interesting phases of their potato production is the thorough field inspection and roguing of unfit plants which the Dimocks make several times during the season, so Ohio writer found that the value of women.' farm products and house rent for Wheth which the farmer did not have to use trouble. He does not tell us which of proof for his statement.

> Admittedly there is interest, taxes, depreciation, repairs, and other expenses to come out of this appraisal of farm income. But on the other hand there are many incidental ex-penses to city life that the farmer usually escapes. WALL STREET IS DAILY REGAINING ITS CONFIDENCE

Developments During Week While Mixed, Viewed Optimistically-Oil Problem

NEW YORK, Aug. 18 (Special)-A veteran observer of the stock market said a few days ago, "We are in a 'bull' market and do not know it.' While most active interests in the Street were unwilling to subscribe fully to this seemingly unjustified assertion, was easy to discern a more hopeful feeling than had existed for some

From the time it became known that President Coolidge had directed the United States Coal Commission to sum-United States Coal Commission to summon both sides to the anthracite controversy to confer with it in New York this week, it has been assumed pretty generally by speculative interests that there would not be a strike on Sept. 1.

While the reports regarding the coal negotiations have not been particularly encouraging, the Street was not disposed to change from the hopeful attitude that it had assumed toward the whole matter. A favorable construction whole matter. A favorable construction was placed upon the announcement some time after the close of business yesterday that the conference between representatives of the operators and miners would be resumed in Atlantic City next week.

Confidence in Coolidge

As the days pass the idea grows steadily in the financial district that firm but constructive action on the part of the new Chief Executive of the Naof the new Chief Executive of the Nation may easily bring about a very marked change in the outlook with respect to conditions in this country. It is believed that if necessary he will take decisive measures to prevent a repetition of the discomfort and losses suffered by individuals and industry in the United States hear year are a result of United States last year, as a result of the strike of both anthracite and bituminous miners.

There are various other situations in this country which it is confidently believed in the financial district require the kind of action that President Coolidge is fully capable of taking. By this assertion, those who subscribe to it this assertion, those who subscribe to it most fully, say that they are not recommending so-called reactionary or repressive measures against any class or group or any line of business activity or industry. They do feel very strongly, however, that too great liberties have been taken in some directions and that all that is needed to correct them is the exercise of some of the President's characteristic courage and firmness. In the event of such action on his part, it is believed that he would have the cordial support of every law-abiding citizen.

Oll Surplus Market Factor

The reaching of an agreement by the mixed commission that has been studymixed commission that has been study-ing problems involving international re-lations between Mexico and the United States for many weeks naturally pro-duced a favorable impression, particu-larly on the part of those who are most conversant with conditions in Mexico. They realize that much has been lost by the United States in the last 13 years as a result of the revolutions that were in progress in Mexico until a few years ago. It is now pretty generally as a result of the revolutions that were in progress in Mexico until a few years ago. It is now pretty generally assumed that President Coolidge will recognize the Obregon administration within a comparatively short time.

The oil industry in the United States still appears to be in a greatly disturbed state. While the sharp reductions in gasoline prices seemingly have stopped, it cannot be said that a real turn in the industry as a whole has set in. The overproduction of crude oil has been so large for such a long time that it alone has brought about decidedly unstable conditions. The overproduction was chiefly responsible for the sharp cutting of gasoline prices recently, which may be carried still further. There were a good many small and not well-established companies that are not able financially to contend with this overproduction, and the consequent price cutting. Within the last few days there has been considerable talk in financial circles of the probability of financing on a large scale in the aggregate by a number of oil concerns. Many of them, it was pointed out, are not able to offer a good foundation for such financing.

The Wheat Problem

The Wheat Problem

A few weeks ago the probability of large surplus of wheat in this couna large surplus of wheat in this country from this year's crop, was predicted, and much was said of the losses that would be incurred by farmers and by the railroads in the principal wheat growing sections, because the growers of that grain at the low prices then prevailing, would not be able to buy the usual amount of merchandise. The most recent report of the Government indicates a reduction of 15 per cent in the probable winter wheat acreage for interesting features during the week indicates a reduction of 15 per cent in the probable winter wheat acreage for next year. This would mean a decrease of more than 7,000,000 acres. It is unfortunate that those engaged in any industry should go from one extreme to another instead of endeavoring to maintain a reasonable average. If the curtailment in wheat production suggested is carried out, there may ntain a reasonable average. If curtailment in wheat production gested is carried out, there may suggested is carried out, there may easily be a big shortage next year. It is to be doubted that during the latter part of the week the European situation exercised more than a passive restrictive influence upon activities in the financial district. There was a disposition to await further dewas a disposition to await further developments as between Great Britain and France and France and Germany before expressing definite opinions as to the ultimate outcome. International bankers believe that a commission, such as Mr. Hughes suggested, should be agreed to by all the powers and that America should play her part in the deliberation of that body.

conditions. Business is small, with a poi

Foreign countries reported to be contemplating borrowing here include Greece, Turkey and Portugal as well as the cities of Danzig and Hamburg.

During the first half of the current year nearly three-quarters of the public issues floated in the London market were for overseas, and criticism has been lately raised on the ground that so long as financial conditions are satisfactory no one worries how money will be spent and frequently this country's foreign competitors get the benefit.

It is pointed out that now there are precitally only two lending centers.

THE PAGE OF THE SEVEN ARTS

New York to Aurora, Illinois by Way of the Art Line

New York, Aug. 16 RT is hitting the trail these sum-A mer days with a vengeance. But the unexplanation of the select company are Edwin Blashfield, John F. Carlson, Charles H. Davis, Victor Higgins, Charles Chapman, H. A. Vincent, Charles H. Woodbury, Glenn Newell, Chauncey F. Since there is no government proof the fine arts among the smaller centers of the country (as is so admirably carried out in France), these att, Gutzon Borglum, less-favored sections are largely left man, and Chester Beach. to shift for themselves. Nevertheless there is a spirit of eager inquiry abroad into these matters that causes at times such precipitate action as the call that came from Aurora to the Grand Central Art Galleries in New York for help in arranging an exhibition of painting and sculpture at the Central States Fair, to be held there from Aug. 17 to 25. The Grand Central Galleries, organized to spread a knowledge and appreciation of modern American art wherever possible, readily acquiesced; after a considerable monetary item for transportation had been assumed by the eager Illinoisans, 160 paintings and some thirty bronzes were assembled for the exhibition, all examples representing the best contemporary art.

The advantages of being located in a railroad station were exemplified in shipping this collection, since the facilities of this amazing terminal enabled a box-car to take the items almost directly from the gallery elevators, obviating the necessity elaborate crating, and to carry them straight to a siding adjacent to the art gallery on the fair grounds at Aurora. Here was tangible reward for the enterprising people who con-ceived of an art gallery in a railroad station; there should be even greater reward in the privilege of appearing before the many thousands who will pass through the Aurora Gallery.

A fine list of artists will compete with the multiple attractions of this State fair. Wayman Adams sends his portrait of Booth Tarkington, the disinguished next-door neighbor, which should do much in putting to rest any feeling of restraint among middle-westerners in the presence of so many westerners in the presence of so many distinguished easterners. E. L. Blumenschein and Walter Ufer can be counted on to prove the west a considerable factor in art through their colorful canvases from New Mexico; E. I. Couse and Albert Groil treat of the Indian and the open spaces and are generously represented.

Joseph Pennell sends some of the

During the first week in September there will be shown in the galleries of the Painters' and Sculptors' Gallery Association in the Grand Central Station the collection of American art destined for the second biennial exhihition of the fine arts to be held in the Palazzo di Belle Arti, Rome, which will open on Nov. 4 and will continue until the middle of April, 1924. Joseph Pennell, assisted by Timothy Cole and Charles H. Woodbury, has charge of the graphic arts section of the exhibition; the commissioner for sculpture is George Gray Barnard, assisted by Andrew O'Connor and Charles Grafly, while in painting Frederick Dielman, assisted by Frank W. Benson, Frank P. DuMond, Childe Hassam, Gari Melchers, and Willard L. Metcalfe, has been put in charge.

The Guild of Silvermine Artists recently held an exhibition of paintings by Frank T. Hutchins, Charles Rieffel and Carl Schmitt with sculpture by Alice Morgan Wright, following the general exhibition of members' work which opened the new Guild Hall. The gallery holds at present an exhibition of prints and drawings by members, to be followed by a second general exhibition from Aug. 25 to Sept. 10.

The Grand Central Galleries are sending an exhibition of paintings to Stockbridge, Mass., to be shown at the Casino during the latter part of August. While the number of paintings is limited, several handsome canvases are included, notably a portrait of a child by Jean McLane in her most vivid and engaging manner.

At Southampton an exhibition of paintings by the well-known French landscapist, Victor Charreton, was opened this week at the Parrish Memorial Gallery, and will continue until Aug. 27.

FRENCH IN TUNIS VIEW ASKANCE INFLUX OF HARDY SICILIANS

"Little Italy" Moves En Masse Across the Sea Into Colony Where Gauls Are Already Outnumbered

French Outnumbered

This condition will seriously aggravate the difficulties of France in Tunisia. The French are in a serious minority as compared with other Europeans. Two years ago the total European population was 156,115 (that of the natives is nearly 2,000,000) while here were 54,476 French and 84,799 Italians. In Tunis, the city itself, there are 42,592 Italians to 22.206

The French have had difficulty in attracting their own people to Tunisia in the numbers desired. In the last 10 years, there has been a considerable increase in French immigration coupled with a decrease in the Italian.

Now French immigration is slackening and the Tunisian French element view with dismay the proposals made in France that foreign peoples on the French borders should be tempted to come over the line and colonize in France, being given French nationality quickly and on cheap terms, thereby assisting the man-power and introducing new productive strains.

It is argued in Tunis that if France at home may do this and finds it necessary, the prospects for Tunis must be poor.

Political Problems Raised

Tovarni Ruble Becomes an Index American Prohibition Benefits Standard by Which to Compare Value of Commodities

MOSCOW, July 15 (Special Correspondence)—The steady recovery of ence)—At a recent meeting of the Russian industry after its period of Dutch National League for Local extreme depression in 1919, 1920, and 1921 is indicated by the course of wages during the year 1922. Russian wages are calculated in "tovarni ruble." The tovarni ruble is an index standard of value, based upon the cost of living necessities. When prices rise the purchasing power of the tovarni ruble, in terms of Russian currency, also rises. The value of the tovarni ruble at the present time is about 100 Soviet rubles, or 65 cents. According to figures made public by the statistical department of the Moscow newspaper, Economic Life, the monthly average of wages for all Russia in January, 1922, was 5.5 tovarni rubles. January, 1922, was 5.5 tovarni rubles. Visited the United States on behalf of This gradually rose during the year the Dutch East Indian Government, until it reached 10.6 rubles in December. The rise in wages continued during the winter, the figure of 12 being reached in February. The pre-wa monthly average wage of industrial workers in Russia was 22 rubles.

The increase in wages was rather unevenly distributed, the scale rising more rapidly in Moscow and Petrograd than in the provinces. Some classes of Moscow workers had admost reached pre-war wage levels. So the workers in food industries received an average of 20.6 rubles at the end of 1922, their pre-war figure being 21

A similar movement in wages was noticeable in Petrograd during 1922. The average wage for all trades in this city was 8.6 rubles at the beginning of the year, 18.9 at the end. The general tendency in Petrograd has been to even up wages, to eliminate the very wide discrepancies which formerly existed in the wage scales of various classes of workers. Along with the improvement in wages has gone a steady increase in the number of the unemployed, which rose from 88,000 in January, 1922, to 387,000 in The process of concentration which

The Russian Government's remedy for this situation, as stated by Trotzky his important report before the when the United States would be a twelfth congress of the Russian Communist Party, is to close the worst factories in an effort to increase the ment attended this meeting, and are oductivity of the best.

A report in a recent issue of Izvestia contends that this process of concentration must go on, especially in the metal industry. In support of this argument it presents a number of facts and figures. The metal industry is now divided into 20 Government trusts, which control 184 factories. One hundred and thirteen of these factories are actually working. Out of 66 of the largest of these factories only 12 are employed to more than 50 per cent of capacity.

PALESTINE POLICY

High Commissioner's Presence in London Gives Rise to Usual Crop of Rumors

By LEONARD STEIN Special from Monitor Bureau LONDON, July 21-Sir Herbert Samuel, the High Commissioner for Palestine, recently reached London on his annual leave. His arrival was the signal for the usual crop of rumors. He consistently refuses to be interviewed and it may be safely assumed that none of the rumors which are current are based on inside information. What is obvious is that the situation created by the failure of the Palestine elections, and by the effect projected British treaty with the King of the Hedjaz, requires to be carefully considered, and that the High Commissioner's presence in London is a suitable opportunity for discussing Speculation has been further provoked by the announcement which has just been made that the situation in mittee of the Cabinet. Earlier in the year a similar committee was set up to inquire into British commitments in the Colonial Secretary, the Duke of Devonshire, and called into consulta-

in connection with the anti-alcohol tocol by which existing British relaws, said prohibition was not the sponsibilities in Irak were made sublority, ject to what is roughly, but somewhat inaccurately, described as a four-year

In the case of Palestine, the Govern P. van der Meulen said he had rement has not shown anxiety to prewith the utmost care.

N. A. de Vries emphasized the fact that one cannot get the right idea about prohibition when dependent on but in regard to our relations with other the news in the press. Ninety per cent powers, if we resigned that trust which of this news is sent out from one cenhas been deliberately placed upon us, and which has been confirmed by the League of Nations.

These utterances do not absolutely preclude any attempt to impose time-limit on British commitments in the case of Palestine, as in the case of Irak, but they make it impossible that any far-reaching change of policy is in contemplation

There is reason to believe that the cope of the Palestine committee is narrower than might at first sight be assumed. There are serious financial problems, particularly those conected with the Palestine loan. Most important of all, perhaps, there are the difficulties created by the Arab boycott of the new constitution and by the refusal of the Arabs even to serve on the proposed advisory council.

Mr. Rabinoff said he had lately been studying this paper with reference to making out a weekly budget of expense for the opera company which he will rehearse at Stony Point in the summer of 1924 and which he will put on the road in the autumn of that year.

Items that struck me as interesting were those referring to singers, conductors and orchestra, the weekly cost for principal artists being set down as $14,000, that for directors of music as $1300, and that for orchestral players as $3300. A specific fee that attracted my attention was $3000 a week, paid to Felix Weingartner for his services as conductor. A rather remarkable charge, I should say, was that for the press. picture impressive in its dignity and earnestness; there it is the man in heroic struggle against a world to which he was ill adapted, a man with scorn of hypocrisy and insincerity. But it is in the Diary of Mme. D'Arblay (more familiarly Fanny Burney) that we see the great literary "lion" of the day disport himself in light and play-4. 4 4

It is delightful to read Fanny's ingenuous accounts of the fabulous success of her "Evelina"—a success cess of her "Evelina"—a success which it is a bit hard to understand today, for though we can grant the book charm, quaintness, humor, and above all, understanding of a young girl's heart, we find it hard none the ess to imagine Mr. Burke sitting up all night to read it, and Sir Joshua Reynolds opering fifty pounds to know the anthor. But this is as nothing to the adulation poured out upon it by Dr. Johnson, for this caustic and often ungracious critic goes into ec-stasies over it. "Mr. Johnson returned home full of the praises of the book I had lent him and protesting there were passages in it which might do honour to Richardson." Or again, "Harry Fielding too would have been of her"-"There is nothing as delicately finished in all Fielding's works as 'Evelina.' + + +

Dr. Johnson's admiration, moreover, seems to have been conceived when the book was actually anonymous. But it is quite natural that when he realizes that the author is a charming young girl, the daughter of an old friend, he outdoes himself in graceful compliment. The Diary is full of him. It describes his strange mannerisms, "his body is continual agitation 'seesawing' up and down," his habit of withdrawing from the company, poring over books, "almost touching the backs of them with his eyelashes." She tells us also of his prejudices—his criticism of Garrick, his quarrel with poor Mr. Pepys, in which "he appeared unamiable in his love of victory." In general he reserved his most amiable mood for his "little Burney." His praise gave her "such a flight of spirits that I danced a jig to Mr. Crisp

Poor soul, our hearts go out to her after all these years as we read how she becomes confused and upset over her cross-examination on her reading, and the doctor's rejoinder—"She might soon be tormented, madam, for I am not quite sure she knows what a book is." This, to be sure, is the more familiar Johnsonian vein. But the account here, as a whole, is one of gracious compliment and friendliness. What young author's heart would not swell with pride, when he said "I ad-mire her for her good sense, for her humour, for her discernment, for her manner of expressing them, and for her writing talents."

As for Fanny's admiration of him,we can read it between all the lines— her constant, childlike wonder and surprise that one so great should be interested in her achievement. (Some have thought her a little complacent to repeat all these tributes, but her joy is so obvious, so naïve that it is wholly disarming). Yet in another sense, she was no mere child, but a young woman of quick repartee and true understanding of the great man.
When someone asked her if she did not express to him her admiration, she replied with a true humility: could say would flatter him.'

BOSTON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1923

EDITORIALS

APPARENTLY the question of the restoration of full diplomatic relations with Greece is likely to receive

Greece and the United States

definite attention at Washington in the immediate future. The ostensible reason for delay in the matter has been that courtesy suggests that action be deferred until after Great Britain shall have acted. Britain in its turn has manifested a somewhat similar attitude of deference toward the United States in withholding recognition from Mexico until action by the American Republic. The situation as respects Greece has in it elements which should appeal to the more unselfish sentiments of the American people, while not wholly devoid of certain considerations which may have justified the prolonged delay in extending the hand of fellowship.

The unsettled conditions in Greece have resulted in a refusal of practically all the great powers to grant it full recognition, although Spain, Denmark and most of the Baltic powers never broke off relations. Yet Greece is now suffering from a situation for which, to some extent, the United States Government is morally responsible. It is a matter of recorded history that the unhappy adventure of the Greek Army in Angora was due to the concerted action of England, France, and the United States. For reasons that seemed good to the rulers of those three nations, the Greek Army, once installed there, at their incentive, was left without support, either military, financial, or moral. It was overwhelmingly defeated by the Turks and driven from the territory it occupied, followed by an even greater army of refugees fleeing before the vengeance of the Moslems. These refugees, now a charge upon the Greek Government, are said to number no less than 730,000 people.

From other countries given over to the domination of the Turk by the Treaty of Lausanne have fled enough other fugitives to bring the total number up to 1,150,000 on March first last, according to official figures derived from Greek sources. While the American Red Cross has aided enormously in the care of these refugees, and the British Relief Committee, together with other charitable organizations from other nations, have joined in this benevolent undertaking, the burden upon the Greek Government is nevertheless a crushing one. Greece is not a wealthy nation. Its manufacturing industries are slender, its agricultural territory limited. Financially, the Government is overwhelmed by the demands made upon it in the name of ordinary humanity that these refugees be

It may be urged that recognition by the American Government would not necessarily lead to any mitigation of these conditions. But with recognition Greece would be in a position to act and the people of this country might be given an opportunity to judge of the plea for the fulfillment of the agreement made by the United States in 1017 to give to Greece a credit of $50,000,000. This agreement was formally made and ratified, and in accordance with its terms Greece issued currency based upon this loan, of which $15,000,000 was actually paid over prior to 1920. Thereupon, because of the fact that the Greek electorate retired the Venizelos Government and reinstated Constantine in power, further payments were stopped. If the United States should now complete the contract into which it entered, the situation in Greece would be materially ameliorated.

But as matters now stand in the State Department, Greece has no recognized envoy at Washington able to press this issue. The Nation is in the position of a claimant before a court unable to secure a lawyer qualified to press his case. It is hardly believable that the refusal of the Administration to recognize Greece is in any sense dictated by a desire to prevent the proper presentation of the appeal for the completion of this loan. Nevertheless, that is the effect which it produces. Concerning the justice of completing this transaction, it does not seem to us that there can be much difference of opinion. But certainly that advantage should be taken of the power of the Government to refuse recognition to a friendly government, in order to prevent that government from presenting its claim under an agreement formerly ratified, does not seem to be the method of fair play or of international comity.

It must have struck many observers as at least a coincidence that former President Wilson and the late President Harding should each have been rendered incapable of continuing his important work as the Chief Executive of the United States through physical disability of similar nature. Anyone, also, whose attention has been turned to the great activity at this time of what Paul calls in his epistles the carnal mind, must have wondered if there was not possibly some connection between this fact and the tragic occurrences referred to in connection with both Mr. Wilson and Mr. Harding. It has been demonstrated that violent emotions produce poisonous effects not only upon those indulging them but also upon those coming in intimate contact with them. May not, therefore, also the physical disabilities experienced by Mr. Wilson and Mr. Harding possibly be accounted for, to some extent at least, by mental causes external to themselves?

When one remembers, indeed, the attacks and tirades of abuse which have with intent been directed against these two men, it is almost a wonder that they stood up under them as long as they did. Hatred, jealousy, revenge, and selfishness produce a mental mist which is anything but healthful. And yet it is in such an environment that the people of America, and of the world, have been urging their presidents and high officials to action, Secret service men may be able to protect the body of him who is in control of affairs, but they are incapable of constituting themselves a barrier to ward off the evil effects of this mental miasma.

It is high time that a new sense of things was entertained along these lines. No longer should it be taken for granted that it is only that which can be seen with the physical eyes which is dangerous to life and limb. The liberated carnal mind is "a murderer from the beginning," and one of its most active efforts is to make men fail to appreciate this fact, thus leaving it to carry on its fell purposes unmolested. Now is the time when a halt must be called in this direction.

IN THE historical play, "If I Were King." Louis XI of France is shown in a thrilling scene rapidly changing his mind to conform to the shifts in popular sentiment, as revealed by the shouts of the mob. "Vox populi, vox Dei:" This old Latin proverb is still true. Modern democracy does not express itself solely by street demonstrations. It votes and the rulers appear to yield. In France there has been this summer a fresh illustration of this. By-elections have shown a return of public sentiment toward the Left. Radical candidates for Parliament have been elected in both the Lower Seine and the Seine and Oise departments. In the latter, the Socialist and Communist vote combined was so large that when these parties merged for the second ballot, no candidate having obtained the requisite majority on the first, the National Bloc candidates withdrew, apparently at the request of the Government, so as to assure the return of the Radicals.

The clerical royalists, who make a great deal of noise in their press and on the Paris streets, did not even present candidates. The belief that France was ready for a Fascisti revolution had, apparently, little foundation. Now, Premier Poincaré, who has hitherto received the consistent support of both the reactionary royalists and the National Bloc, is heralded by his friends as a true "Republican of the Left," an anti-clerical and almost a radical. Under his banner all true "Republicans," which in France has meant exactly the opposite of what it now signifies in the United States, should assemble, they say. Only Socialists, Communists, and royalists need not

The formation of a Center Party with leanings toward the Left has long been under discussion. Since the present semiproportional election law will probably not be changed before the balloting next spring, only a combination of groups, such as the National Bloc, has the chance to get a majority. The "Bloc" itself seems doomed. But is the leadership of the new "Republican Union" to be on the right wing or on the left? Is the banner to be carried by M. Poincaré or by Aristide Briand, or by someone still further to the Left, such as Paul Painlevé or Edouard Herriot? Le Temps says that the personality of the leader matters less than the program, which must be, at home, a liberal enforcement of the clerical laws and respect for the rights of private property; abroad, maintenance of the Versailles Treaty. At the present juncture the foreign policy counts most, and as long as the French people do not despair of the Ruhr occupation, the position of M. Poincaré is secure.

While M. Briand was still in power he tried to organize a majority further to the Left, so as to escape the pressure of the "Bloc" and the royalists, but when he showed signs of weakness toward Mr. Lloyd George's reparations program at Cannes he was recalled and forced to resign. At the next elections he is pretty sure to attempt a "revanche." It was principally his thunder Senator Charles Chaumet tried to steal at Bordeaux when he exclaimed in the course of a political address on July 29: "By happy chance we have today at the head of the Government a man who all his life has consistently been 'one of ours'! M. Poincaré is a Republican of the Left, against whom there cannot be lodged the least accusation of irregularity.

The enigma of the situation is the Radical Party. which before and during the war had the largest representation in the Chamber. It is now badly disorganized. Its floor leader, M. Herriot, formally withdrew in June from the Government majority, but to win at the next elections it must co-operate with the Socialists, who in turn show signs of friendship with the Communists, and France is undoubtedly strong for private property rights. The Radical members of the Poincaré Cabinet have not resigned, and by assuring the election of his friend, Henri Franklin-Bouillon, M. Poincaré has promoted a rival to M. Herriot. Apparently he hopes to split the party if he cannot win it over.

CAUSE for great congratulation is the fact that at last the three-shift plan is being put seriously into operation, in place of the long day of twelve hours, in the steel mills of the United States. It is true that there has been a progressive improvement in this respect shown during the last twentyfive years, but it would now appear that a more radical stand is being taken than ever before, and that the time is not far distant when this relic of barbarity will be completely a thing of the past. It is really useless to argue that there were mitigating circumstances, concerning which the public was ignorant but which rendered the long day permissible. It is still generally conceded that a day, no matter how the issue may be camouflaged, which demands employment over a period of twelve hours, is neither productive in the highest sense for employers, nor conducive to the best interests of the employees.

Reports from Pittsburgh, Cleveland, and Youngstown regarding the first day under the new régime are highly satisfactory. In the latter place, for example, the new system affects about 7000 men who have been working a twelve-hour day, so that some 3000 new employees were needed. Men who had been working at common labor were promoted to permanent jobs and Negroes and foreigners were hired to replenish the common labor. Excuses are of little avail. The very fact that the changes were made with such comparative ease carries with it the conclusion that they were right ones.

It must be granted that the actual pay envelope of the men will contain a slightly less amount than heretofore, but the fact that the employees will now have four hours more each day in which to be with their families and enjoy the normal experiences of life will amply repay them for this apparent loss. Though the steel corporations have fought hard against the changes, now that they are taking place it is safe to say that their wisdom will soon be realized by all concerned.

EXPENDITURES of the Boston Opera Company in 1911-12, about which public information was unavailable at the time the organization was running, can be somewhat judged from figures furnished to The Christian Science Monitor by Max Rabinoff, head of the American Institute of Operatic Art at Stony Point, N. Y., and published in today's issue of the paper. The budget of the company, made for purposes of comparison with budgets of the affiliated companies of New York and Chicago, shows the estimated cost of production at the Boston Opera House to have been $48,701.68 per week. Without doubt, persons versed in theatrical management can determine from the several items in the list whether or not the money of the Boston Opera Company was carefully used. But probably even the most casual reader of them can understand why the company, from starting out to give opera at a price of $3 for the best seats, was compelled, before going far, to adopt a $5 rate. No doubt many a person who was a member of the company will discern striking inequalities. Singers may wonder how the $14,000 weekly, set aside for artists, was divided. Orchestral players, in turn, may be able to point out wherein they were justified for the demands they made in the way of salaries from time to time, considering that their large group received but about seven and a half times the pay of the small force in the press department.

If there is one great pity in the musical record of the United States that is remarked upon more than another, it is that the Boston Opera Company in 1914 had to go under. What great things the company accomplished in the five years of its existence, what influence some of the reforms it started have had-especially in the line of scenic decoration—and what it might have done in holding American standards high, had it continued, are subjects that people interested in the cause of the theater of song constantly review. Whether matters would have been helped by the publication twelve years ago of the budget that is published today, is perhaps a vain question. But the figures must come out at last; and why not the moment they are cast up? If the Boston Opera Company was run on too free-handed a scale, a little general discussion might have brought its policies down to a

Another American institution that withholds its expenditures from the observation of the world is the company in New York with which the Boston Opera Company was associated, and from which it used to borrow artists. Just as those who directed opera in Boston were popularly supposed to spend extravagantly, those who handle matters in New York are commonly declared to spend penuriously, and to devote their energies to making opera pay what amounts to dividends to stockholders. There is no likelihood that the New York company will ever go into bankruptcy, as did the Boston company; but the facts about its management must come finally to light, and they ought, in sooth, to come now. Possibly the laboratory of opera which Mr. Rabinoff is establishing on the west bank of the Hudson River, having given a bit of important historic information about the cost of opera, may be influential also in letting the public into a knowledge of current costs.

Editorial Notes

So MUCH lack of understanding prevails regarding the problems which face the management of the large railroads of the United States that a diagrammatic representation of the manner in which the Pennsylvania Railroad system divided up each dollar of its income during 1922, which has just been issued, may come as rather a surprise to some. These, it appears, are the facts in the case: 51.41 cents out of each dollar went directly into the pay roll of the company, 17.07 were used for material and supplies, 7.72 were needed to cover bond interest and other fixed charges, and 7.29 were swallowed up by locomotive fuel, while taxes took 4.45, depreciation 2.58, loss, damage and similar eventualities 2.31, and equipment and joint facility rents 1.52. This left a surplus of just 5.56 cents for dividends, etc. Quite a different picture from that which many have liked to conjure up regarding this situation! 4 4 4

ONE is not surprised that Mr. Laurence J. Goodhew, the chairman of the Sittingbourne Urban District Council, should take exception to the statement in an article published in a London daily, describing the town as "a dull and uninteresting place of one street." This place of some 10,000 inhabitants contains about eight miles of well-kept streets, and within a few minutes' walk of the old High Street are to be found a number of the finest examples in England of beautiful fruit orchards, laid out with an eye to symmetry and culture by generations of expert agriculturists, whose art and methods have been copied throughout the world. As Mr. Goodhew expressed it, a truer description would be, "the gem of the Kentish fruit gardens."

Mussolini and Masonry

By RAOUL MARTINI

ROME, July 25 (Special Correspondence) - Speaking before Parliament in support of his Electoral Reform Law, Mussolini once more showed his hostility to Italian Masonry, or, rather, that branch of Italian Masonry whose Grand Master is Domizio Torrigiani. Directing himself to the Hon. Alessio, he said: "I am very sorry that the Hon. Alessio has brought to this House the miserable, dirty hatreds of the Giustiniani lodges.'

The Hon. Alessio immediately denied that he had ever been a member of a Masonic lodge. But this did not draw from the Premier any expression of regret for his declaration.

Since coming to power Mussolini has sought to destroy, it possible, all the old political parties and all the old fraternal institutions of the country, that menace, he believes, the unity of the Nation. Then, too, in attacking Masonry, he pleases the strong Nationalist wing of his Fascismo. It will be recalled that in recent months the Nationalist Party, headed by Federzoni, has become an integral division of Fascismo. Among the tenets to which it holds strongly is that of devoted support of Roman Catholicism. In Italy the most powerful enemy of the Vatican during the past 150 years has been Masonry; therefore, the Nationalists are fanatically hostile to the craft.

There is another branch of Masonry in the peninsula, with headquarters in Piazza del Gesù, Rome, the Grand Master of the same being Raoul V. Palermi. The Fascisti do not appear to be hostile to this wing of Masonry.

Mussolini's opposition to the Torrigiani branch of Masonry is due mainly to its political activities, while the absence of any expressed hostility on his part to the Palermi Masonry is undoubtedly due to the fact that the Palermi branch rigidly excludes anything of a political nature from its lodges, adhering more strictly to the American Masonic forms and ideals.

The first Masonic lodge was founded in Italy, in Florence, in 1733, by an Englishman, Charles Sackville, Duke of Middlesex. In the next few years its growth was phenomenal, especially in southern Italy and Sicily.

The records show that Italian Masonry at the start cherished warmly the ideal of bettering human conditions. Religion was to be respected. The "Evangelical Law" was its domi-

Regarding Masonry as a dangerous enemy, Pope Clement XII on May 28, 1738, excommunicated it. This excommunication was confirmed by Benedict XIV on April 28, 1751. Masonry was closely identified with the Carbonari and Mazzini's "Young Italy." It furnished very largely the inspiration for the revolutionary activities of the Carbonari. At one time no Carbonari could hold high office in that organization unless he was a recognized Mason of exalted grade. In preparing for the revolution of 1821, the young Carlo

Alberto, heir to the Piedmont throne, was in continual communication with General Gifflenga and the other heads of Italian Masonry. The steadfast opposition of the Vatican to any movement looking to the union and freedom of Italy roused in Masonry a strong spirit of anti-cléricalism, which finally led to an irreligiousness in Italian Masonry that dominated it for many years.

About 1880 Masonry in Italy was all-powerful. It controlled most of the important governmental posts, as well as the humbler positions in the public adminstration. Most of the historic names of the Risorgimento were enrolled on the pages of Italian Masonry.

Giuseppe Garibaldi was initiated in 1844 in the "Refuge of Virtue" Lodge. Soon thereafter he became supreme head of the Masonry of Palermo. In 1861 there were three Masonic centers in Italy: Palermo, with Garibaldi at its head: Naples, with Domenico Angherà the leader, and Turin, with Delpino in charge. From the island of Caprera, in July, 1862, Garibaldi sent the following message to Italian Masons:

The present moments are supreme for our beautiful Italy, completely undertrodden by the foreigner and corrupted by the false priests of Rome. It is our business to reunite all the scattered subjects of the stricken land, that over the Campidoglic may wave, safe and glorious, the national

Our brothers, both as citizens and Masons, must cooperate to the end that Rome may belong to the Italians as the capital of a great and powerful nation. It will be useful if from now onwards all of us prepare ourselves to be ready when the appeal comes from our country. All who have Italian hearts must be furnished with arms and ready to fight

While Garibaldi was embittered by the hostility of the Vatican to the great patriotic cause known as the Risorgimento, he was never irreligious. At the Naples Conference of 1869, when Masons from all over the peninsula had been driven by the opposition of the Church into a materialistic attitude of mind, Garibaldi commandingly shouted, "I am of the religion

Mussolini apparently feels that the day of helpful political Masonic activity in Italy is past. He seems determined that henceforth Italian Masonry shall either cease to occupy itself with political matters, or else be destroyed. But there are perhaps 40,000 Masons in Italy. They are unquestionably patriots. They know well the history and the spirit of the Roman Vatican. They are convinced that whenever the political power of the Papacy is strong in the peninsula, as, for example, in the present day, then Italian Masonry should be all the more vigilant and militant.

Italian Masonry, by reason of the persecution it has long endured at the hands of political and priestly tyranny, cherishes profoundly its civil and religious liberties. With its spirit purified and refined by the new fires, it will undoubtedly not only continue to exist but will grow in strength and stature.

A Task Worthy of Achievement

WORLD amity, if it is ever achieved at all, will be the most "artificial" and difficult experiment in the history of mankind, says The New Republic. There can be no hope of attaining it, certainly, until the public opinion of the chief nations has been aroused so that the average man feels a passionate resentment at being ordered to go and die because of some politician's incompetence—a type of resentment now felt by only a few tender-minded people. To achieve this will require a campaign of education so enormous, so long continued and expensive that the stoutest heart may well quail at the prospect. This huge task will require the co-operation of every element in the community which hates war and believes a better way must be found. Liberalism has, and can have, no more important task than the effort to bring into harmony the groups which are hampering their own efforts by stubborn insistence on one particular road to salvation, in the vain expectation that the cause of peace may be advanced by war among its friends.
